the Journal of Agriculture

1998-99

Agriculture Western Australia is working in partnership with the agricultural sector to achieve record export growth over the next 10 years as part of its valuable contribution to agriculture and the economy of Western Australia. The agency is taking a leading role in the development and success of profitable, sustainable agriculture, free from damaging pests and diseases. By developing and promoting best available technologies and methods, developing integrated agricultural systems, undertaking relevant research, and providing useful information, Agriculture Western Australia will generate and deliver innovative ideas and solutions to meet the challenges and accelerate the success of agriculture.

The Journal of Agriculture has undergone a number of changes in style and frequency since it was first published in 1894. Now an annual publication, the 1998/99 Journal of Agriculture focuses on a selection of the many significant contributions being made to agriculture through the efforts of staff at Agriculture Western Australia.
